The Reluctant Pioneer aka Washington Territory's Grand Lady, Matilda Koontz cherishes her life as a wife and mother on a Missouri farm, but her hardworking husband wants to claim free farmland in the Pacific Northwest. When he suggests selling the farm to trek two thousand miles across the Oregon Trail, she balks. But in the spring of 1847, Matilda and Nicholas

Koontz and their sons embark on a grueling journey westward. Fresh graves testify to dangers of disease, accidents, starvation, and a multitude of hazards threatening her family and her beloved's dream. With new struggles at every turn, Matilda wonders how she can protect her sons on such a perilous journey. Will they reach the trail's end? Will the babe growing inside her womb survive? When tragedy strikes, the question changes: How can she possibly continue?

This year's speaker at the Annual Pioneer Picnic is Julie MacDonald Zander, an award-winning journalist, who earned a bachelor's degree in communications and political science from the University of Washington before working two decades as a newspaper reporter and editor. Through her personal history company, Chapters of Life (www.chaptersoflife.com), she has published more than 90 individual, family, and community histories. As part of a three-book client project, she researched pioneers who crossed the Oregon Trail in 1847 as her client's relatives started the Aurora Colony. He also was related to the first native-born governor of Oregon.

Between personal history projects, Julie spent five years researching the story of Matilda (Glover) Koontz Jackson before publishing the nonfiction book about her life, Washington Territory's Grand Lady, in 2019. It was a finalist for both the Western Writers of America Spur Award and the Will Rogers Medallion. Her oldest brother, Philip Glover, and his wife, Sarah (Koontz) Glover, followed her west in 1849 with their family and settled in Marion County near Salem.

Believing Matilda's story deserved a larger audience, Julie spent five years learning to write fiction before the release of her debut novel, The Reluctant Pioneer, in September 2024. The novel received a silver Will Rogers Medallion for inspirational fiction and American Bookfest's 2025 Best Book Award for religious fiction. It also was a finalist for Western Writers of America's Best Historical Novel Spur Award.

Her second novel, Shattered Peace: A Century of Silence, is a 2025 time-slip inspired by the heart-breaking events of November 11, 1919, which became known as the Centralia Tragedy. Julie and her husband live in the Pacific Northwest, where they raised their two children.

Author and Historian,
Julie MacDonald Zander,
2026 Annual Picnic
Speaker

Endorsements – Praise for Washington Territory's Grand Lady:

"This book is a 'must read.' It tells the incredible and exciting story of one woman's journey on foot across the plains to the promised land of Oregon Territory. In many ways, Matilda Koontz Jackson could be described as the 'first lady' of Washington State. She watched it all unroll in front of her eyes and she played a significant part in making our life what it is today. The book is well written and documented with many details that the other historians have missed. Frankly, I loved the book and recommend it to all. Readers will not be disappointed!"

~ Ralph Munro, retired Washington Secretary of State, 1980-2000

Endorsements – Praise for The Reluctant Pioneer:

"The Reluctant Pioneer by Julie McDonald Zander is a gripping debut novel about the westward journey of historical figure Matilda Koontz and her family. Julie's meticulous research recreates the harrowing and heart-stopping trip. She transported me back to 1847 and put me on the trail with Matilda as she overcame heartbreaking trials to reach Oregon City. Julie is an incredible storyteller! I couldn't put The Reluctant Pioneer down until the very last word."

~Leslie Gould, #1 bestselling and award-winning author of A Brighter Dawn and more than three dozen other novels

"I've been fascinated by the Oregon Trail pioneers since I was a girl, and their courage continues to intrigue and inspire me. Julie McDonald Zander's debut novel captures the tumultuous journey of these pioneers through the heartbreaking trials and unwavering hope of one woman who began the walk to Oregon Territory in 1847 with her husband and four boys. The Reluctant Pioneer invites readers to join Matilda Koontz on the trail and experience her joy and sorrow as she perseveres in her husband's search for a new home. If you enjoy reading Jane Kirkpatrick's fiction or other historical novels about women who overcome tremendous hardship for the sake of their family, you'll love The Reluctant Pioneer!"

~ Melanie Dobson, award-winning author of Where the Trail Ends, Catching the Wind, and more than two dozen other novels

"The Reluctant Pioneer is a heart-grabbing read about a courageous woman with incredible faith and fortitude. Based on a true story, walking alongside this woman on her journey from Missouri to the Oregon Territory grips your emotions. You find yourself cheering for her and grieving with her. I couldn't put it down. It encouraged me to keep trusting in our powerful God. He alone brings us through our trials."

~ Marilyn Rhoads, Oregon Christian Writers past-president

"Julie Zander is a lover of history, and it shows in this intriguing book. This fictionalized version of the true story of Oregon Trail pioneer Matilda Glover Koontz is replete with authentic detail and historical accuracy and draws a vivid picture of the difficulties those early travelers experienced on the trail to a new life. A must-read for fans of historical fiction and of strong women who will go to the ends of the earth for their families."

~ Dawn Shipman, award-winning author of the Lost Stones of Argonia series

"Ms. Zander has taken the facts of a true story and woven a heart-rending, beautiful tale inspiring us to relate to the courage, heartbreak, and joys of an amazing woman."

~ Barbara Tifft Blakey, author of the upcoming release Angel of Second Street, Bertie's War, and three stories in collections

The Reluctant Pioneer by Julie McDonald Zander features a breathtaking thrill of a ride down a waterfall, horrible tragedies, and the drudgery and dangers of crossing the scenic west by foot on the Oregon Trail. Inspired by the true story of Matilda Koonz Jackson, this engaging historical novel brings readers to tears and, at other times, to the edge of their chairs. Zander infuses realistic detail with facts while painting the portrait of an anxious but resilient pioneer whose stabilizing influence settled the West. ~ Sandra Crowell, author of The Land Called Lewis and Up the Swiftwater

Written by a local historian, The Reluctant Pioneer is filled with historical details, rich description, and raw emotion. Zander's skillful narration brings to life the true story of pioneer Matilda Jackson and her remarkable journey on the Oregon Trail from Missouri to Lewis County, Washington. A compelling, inspiring, and beautifully crafted novel! Perfect for historical fiction lovers who enjoy reading about real people and Pacific Northwest history. Recommended for middle school to adult.

~ Robin Montgomery, former history teacher and freelance author

Endorsements — Shattered Peace: A Century of Silence

Shattered Peace is the heartbreaking story of families torn apart in the aftermath of World War I. Set in a small Washington town, this dual timeline novel follows the lives and tragic deaths of soldiers haunted by their memories of war. Inspired by real events, Julie Zander unveils a century of secrets through past and present characters, skillfully revealing the corruption of power on both sides of Centralia's gut-wrenching massacre. A poignant historical exposé about a mob lynching in Centralia and a compelling tribute to the soldiers who lost their lives more than a hundred years ago during their Armistice Day Parade.

~ Melanie Dobson, award-winning author of Catching the Wind and Memories of Glass.

Julie Zander has penned an incredible dual-time story with nuance, empathy, and insight toward war veterans in both the past and the present. She explores the 1919 Centralia Tragedy, a violent conflict between Great War veterans and the Wobblies, and sheds light and eventually hope for victims of trauma and wounds of all kinds, no matter the century or circumstances. Her storytelling is timeless—and exactly what we need today.

~ Leslie Gould, award-winning author of A Brighter Dawn

Shattered Peace is a great read. It also achieves something remarkable: bringing to vivid life the real experiences—sweet and sad, violent and victorious, hard-charging and heartbreaking -- of the kinds of people who surely surrounded and had their lives forever changed by "the battle of Centralia," when men were shot down on the street, armed militias roamed the town, and city fathers hung a man from a bridge in the last lynching ever to take place in Washington state. I've studied the history of this event for more than 20 years, but it's never been as real to me as when I read this book. Her treatment of all sides is compassionate and understanding. Out of divisions that have lasted a century, she sees a path to peace, forgiveness and even love.

~ Brian Mittge, author of Framing Tragedy: The Chronicle Chronicle's Changing View of Its 1919 Hometown 'Massacre' and co-author of George Washington of Centralia

Shattered Peace, the second novel by journalist Julie McDonald Zander, holds multiple layers in its title. A contemporary setting features a woman veteran battling the scars of war as she claims her ancestors' home. The diary she discovers opens the unspoken horrors of an actual event, the Centralia Tragedy of 1919 and the bloody clash of labor and World War I veterans in the streets of a small American town.

The themes of secrets and post-traumatic stress resonate through this action-packed, white-knuckle historical novel. Zander's journalistic research and her intense plot development make Shattered Peace an unforgettable novel—that rings very close to truth and a shattered peace in all of us.

~Sandra Crowell, author of The Land Called Lewis and The Ravaged Forest

Author Julie Zander has taken a piece of Centralia's little spoken of past and beautifully woven fact with fiction to create a compelling story. The back and forth in time is masterfully done and readers will fall in love with her well-developed characters. I eagerly look forward to reading more of Ms. Zander's work.

~ Barbara Tifft Blakey, author of The Angel of Second Street

In Shattered Peace, Ms. Zander brings to life the details of horrific events in Centralia, Washington, in November 1919. Two polarized factions were at odds with each other—wealthy, unsympathetic lumber barons and union members who wanted better working conditions. While both sides had valid points, their attempts to handle those differences with violence left five people dead.

I was drawn into the story from page one, and it has stayed with me since. The story line was well written and easy to follow. The characters were both believable and relatable. Though some of the subject matter was hard to read, I'm glad I read it.

Ms. Zander brings other true-to-life events into the narrative, such as the Spanish Flu epidemic and a contemporary story involving a female Seabee and the struggles she faces with PTSD. I highly recommend this thought-provoking book that makes one look inward and assess the things in life that really matter.

~ Debby Lee, author of Beneath a Peaceful Moon

Oldest Home in Portland – Tigard Rogers House

History of Andrew and Sarah Jane Tigard compiled by Michelle Painter, a member of SDOP

“Fortunately, there are many surviving details of Andrew Jackson Tigard and Sarah Jane Edwards Tigard, the builders of the Rogers-Tigard House.

Andrew’s father, Hugh Tigard, a son of Revolutionary patriots, served under General Andrew Jackson during the War of 1812 and fought at the Battle of New Orleans in 1815. Hugh later named his second son, Andrew Jackson Tigard, likely after the future president he served under. By the 1820s the Tigards were established in the Ozark region of northwestern Arkansas.

When crops failed in April 1852, Andrew and Sarah left Arkansas for Oregon with one wagon, five yoke of oxen, and one cow. Sarah traveled the Oregon Trail with a three-year-old and an infant only two months old, having given birth in February. The Tigard-Gilbreath wagon train followed the northern Oregon Trail west. The final leg of the journey took the dangerous Columbia River passage downstream from The Dalles into Sandy.

Sarah brought to Oregon her younger brother Joseph (19), and their father, Thomas. Joseph soon married the pioneer daughter of John Hall, founder of Sherwood, Oregon. A 1985 family letter records that Sarah and Edward were niece and nephew of Robert Edwards, the owner of 77 acres of lower Manhattan.

Andrew – called simply “Jackson” in Wilson Tigard’s letters – was more than a pioneer. During the journey, he helped arrange care for the orphaned Craig children after both parents died on the trail, assigning them to David Harer’s protection. Family descendants later remembered Andrew as a minister, a mail carrier, school-board president, and community leader in Yakima County despite reportedly being unable to read or write.

Wilson’s letters reveal that Andrew’s homestead in the 1850s was already increasing in value because of its location. “Jackson can get 10 dollars per acre for his any day ... it is nearer Portland.” He also wrote, “they are going to start a high school on it the institution will lie in 3 quarters of a mile from Jacksons house.”

The letters also show the family’s political convictions. Wilson attacked the pro-slavery “Salem clique” and opposed the expansion of slavery into Oregon. Earlier records from Sarah’s Edwards family show only free persons living in the household recorded in the 1840 Arkansas census.

Sarah became known throughout the Yakima Valley for riding a little bay mare sidesaddle while carrying a brown medical bag. She answered calls at all hours to help sick neighbors across the frontier.

Her signature survives on an Oregon Territorial legislative petition alongside the votes of her brother Joseph, husband Andrew, and Mary and Wilson Tigard – evidence that she participated in public civic affairs decades before women gained full voting rights.

A white chair preserved at the John Tigard House Museum, reportedly built by Wilson from the wagon wheel used in the overland journey, remains a tangible reminder of the family’s migration west.”

In 2004, Bridlemile resident Virginia Danger conducted a phone interview with owner, Roger Hancock “The Red House on the southeast corner of Hamilton and Shattuck is the home of Roger Hancock. In 1875 his great grandparents, Edward and Ester Rogers, bought 180 acres from Andrew Tigard, one of the two Tigard brothers who held the Donation land Claim. The other brother, Wilson Tigard, founded the town of Tigard.

Andrew Tigard built the red house in 1851. Roger was told by his grandmother that the original color of the house was light gray, next it was white, and the aluminum siding was put on in about 1970. The house was sold out of the family in 1939. Several owners followed. In 1980 the elderly couple who owned the house needed to move. The house was on the market about a week when Roger heard about it. Luckily the realtor had been Roger’s high school classmate and helped acquire it. The prospective buyer planned to tear the house down and put three houses on the land. There was a bidding war, but Roger got the house and has been there ever since.

The cellar in the house was at first a root cellar. In about 1940 it was enlarged. The crossbeams of the cellar are peeled lots.

The Ponderosa Pine, a heritage tree, was planted in 1877. Roger's great grandparents came to Oregon from England and settled on the farm. They had never seen the Pacific Ocean. One day they hitched up their horse and wagon and made a three-day camping trip to the coast. His great grandmother wanted a souvenir. There were no postcards in 1877 – but the tree is a mighty big souvenir now! Roger commented on two pear trees that are even older. He was told that Tigard brought these trees to Oregon and planted them right where they are now. He will show them to me when we meet.

Hess Road, now Hamilton Street, originally was a road to the Hess farm, which was about where Bridlemile School is. Shattuck Road was originally called Cooper Road. The Lees' home and spring was south of Hamilton at about where 48th now is. The house was gone by 1880. At one time, there were some Lee family graves in the scrub behind the house.

The picture. Roger says it was not taken in 1898. Joe Rogers' store is in the picture, and it was not built until at least 1908. Joe Rogers built the store and ran it for a long time after he lost his right arm and was unable to farm.

State of Oregon land Surveys. Roger said that in 1860 each county in Oregon was surveyed." (Source: <https://www.bridlemilepdx.org/people-history-t-r-house>)

Future of the House and Placemaking Efforts
Unfortunately, the property is still not in use and has been subject to local crime. On February 4, 2026?, there was graffiti vandalism at the 1930 white house on the same property and a month later, the front window of the 1855 Tigard-Rogers house was broken. To change the trajectory of this neglected historical asset, MPO Shanti del Rosario and Ariel Williamson, the founder Values Based Mentorship, called a meeting of stakeholders. On May 20, the stakeholder group consisted of nearby residents, related descendants, history buffs, youth leaders, elected leaders and community activists; all agreed the space holds historical significance and the common goal is to continue the value of the space.

Shanti explained to the crowd how young people seek a safe space to get together. She gave the example of a "third space" outdoors that includes a simple memorial bench under some shade. Shanti explained why students might need somewhere to go to do homework, socialize, etc., besides school. Professor David Terrel [SM1.1] agreed that this would be good for young people's mental health and offered that teachers and tutors could be made available with scholarships or subsidies.

Conestoga Bench design idea

Neighbors were curious if the little red house could be a museum and the white house a coffee shop, depending, of course, on the conditions of the buildings. No matter what happens inside the homes, the outside space is ripe for opportunity to partner with those interested in heritage orchards, pollinator colonies, indigenous studies, and pioneer projects. Many low-cost programs were suggested that could help people disconnect from tech and connect with community.

SDOP is proud that MPO Shanti del Rosario is leading the charge to preserve and enhance this asset for us and future generations.
